

Finding a bed frame for you isn't an easy task, we understand! You need to consider various crucial factors such as the size, colour, material and bed frame style that can overwhelm you! There are different types of bed frames available in multiple sizes. So, the most important of all is the size because no matter how luxurious your bed and mattress maybe, what if they're too small for you to sleep comfortably. Perhaps, you have a bed that's so large and takes up the entire room and a new bed can become a reason of frustration rather than relaxation

If you're not sure of the difference between a king, queen or a double bed frame, then let's understand through this guide and get the idea of the size you need.

Size of your bedroom

First, think about how much space you have in your bedroom. You might have a desire for a king bed frame but if your living space becomes cramped and you get no space for your wardrobe, other bedroom furniture or no space to move around. Then it may be a great sacrifice.

What bed size is right?

Bed size measurements usually refer to the mattress size, which requires to fit comfortably inside the bed frame you choose. To make sure you get a perfect fit, buy your mattress and bed frame together.

While choosing a bed frame, you need to think about your sleeping style and anyone that you share your bed with.

Standard bed sizes in Australia

Mattress size Dimensions (cm)

Single 92*188cm

King single 107*204cm

Double (full bed) 133*188cm

Sizes can vary between manufacturers.

Single bed

A single bed can be ideal for a kids bedroom or solo sleepers, offering enough space for older children, teenagers or small adults. It's a great space-saving option in a small studio apartment. However, it isn't ideal for taller or larger sleepers.

King Single Beds

A king single bed offers slightly more length and width when compared to a single bed. It's adequate for a taller adult with some extra space but difficult for larger sleepers, but larger sleepers and couples will find it hard to squeeze in.

Double bed

A double bed is appropriate for couples who like to sleep closer, those sleeping with their pet or a single person wanting more space than a single bed. Though it may not be long enough for tall people. Couples may not find it suitable due to its limited space.

Queen bed

Commonly used, Aussie couples prefer using it as a queen bed frame offers ample space for two people or those sharing their bed with a large pet. It's an excellent option for a single person who is too tall for a double bed.

King bed

People who spread out and sleep or two large adults and a child or a large pet find it suitable for them. A king bed also helps minimize the sleep disturbances when your partner moves around.

Different types of bed frames

Bed frames come in wide-ranging styles that suit every bedroom decor. But, there is more than just appearance to think when deciding on which bed frame is right for you.

A bed frame is also the base of your mattress and not all mattresses are compatible with every type of bed frame. Buying your bed frame and mattress together will ensure you have the right match wherein some bed frames can also accommodate mattresses of different thicknesses if adjustable.
